BS Program in Nursing

Nanjing Medical University School of Nursing is one of the pioneers to restore higher nursing education in China in 1980. NMU is among the first in the nation authorized to grant doctoral and master's degrees in nursing. In the 4th round of evaluation by the Ministry of Education in 2017, the nursing discipline of NMU was rated as "B+". The nursing program has been listed as national-level specialty program, and a top-notch academic program of Jiangsu Province. The school owns a provincial-level nursing experimental and teaching demonstrative center.

Nursing education now comprises a multi-level training system at undergraduate and graduate levels. Currently, there are more than 60 full-time and part-time faculty members and more than 1,200 students. There are 28 general hospitals serving as nursing clinical practice and teaching units. The School establishes the concepts of "coordinating knowledge, ability, and quality, and promoting mutual development of learning, practice, and innovation". It defines the teaching theory as "strengthening basis, humanities, practice and innovation". It forms the school's characteristics of "theory-practice application linkage, foundation-clinic-community penetration, science-technology humanity fusion, and teaching-researching-servicing mutual promotion". A large number of excellent professionals in nursing education, nursing research, nursing management and clinical nursing top-notch innovation have been trained for medical colleges and medical institutions in China, many of whom have become well-known experts and scholars in the field of nursing.
